INTRODUCTION

Within the past six months, most coin prices have been relatively stable. Today is definitely a buyer's market, and a large number of choice numismatic items are now being offered at very attractive prices.

For the collector/investor, this means that many items which may have seemed too expensive last year are now available at new reduced prices, and the opportunity is again open to acquire rare pieces with good investment potential.

Just what has caused this change? Will the market next go higher or lower? There are no simple answers to these questions. Like all commodities, coins go through periodic growth and recession cycles. The current trend is a result of public reaction to last year's inflation scare, and this current trust in new economic stabilization programs.

We confidently believe that this is an ideal time to purchase high quality, scarce numismatic items while prices are still at low levels. Unfortunately, inflation can never be fully brought under control and about the only sure way to guard against dollar erosion is to invest in tangible assets — especially numismatic items that will bring you both pleasure and profit.

TWENTY CENT PIECES

1875, much luster. AU50	450.00
1975S. Choice EF45	225.00

1876CC Twenty Cent Piece

In the world of ultra-rare coins, there are few that can compare with the 1876CC twenty cent piece. It has always been recognized as one of a very select small group of rare U.S. coins completely free of question about origin, authenticity, and rarity. As such, the pride of ownership for such a piece cannot be equated to that of the highly touted 1804 dollar, 1913 Liberty nickel, 1885 trade dollar, or pieces of similar ilk.

The 1876CC twenty cent piece is a genuine U.S. issue, intended for circulation and a normal part of U.S. coinage. Except for a strange quirk of fate, it might have been simply a very scarce but ordinary twenty cent piece.

This unusual denomination was never popular. Like the present Susan B. Anthony dollar, its size was too similar to the quarter's and it was easily confused with that coin. Despite the need and logic for a "double dime" (a true decimal denomination), the public never gave up demand for the quarter dollar which was based on the traditional two bit division of the Spanish-American pieces of eight.

The twenty cent series lasted only four years and during that time circulation pieces were made only in 1875 and 1876, the last two years of minting being limited to proof strikings for collectors. The total production for all mints was small, and public rejection of this unusual denomination caused Mint Director H.R. Linderman, in March 1877, to instruct Carson City Mint Superintendent James Crawford to melt all twenty cent pieces on hand and debit the "Silver Profit Fund" with any loss thereon.

It is estimated that only 10 to 14 specimens of this issue escaped the mass melting. The survivors were probably part of a small sampling sent to Philadelphia for assay purposes. Of the remaining pieces, all are now in museums or prominent collections. All but two are recorded as being in uncirculated condition. All have the same identifying die characteristics, most predominant of which is a pronounced doubling of the word LIBERTY on the shield.

This single available specimen of this great historical rarity will bring pride and joy to its new owner and unquestionably will continue to advance in value as it has in the past. It is of museum quality and equal or superior in condition to all of the other known pieces.

Conservatively graded as MS60, it is sharply struck with lovely golden-gray toning. The glittering semi-prooflike reverse has a somewhat frosty appearance. There are a few lint marks evident in the right obverse field and one on the eagle's breast, but nothing of any major significance.

An analysis of the few public offerings of this major rarity reveals only a handful of major collections have ever contained a genuine 1876CC twenty cent piece. This illustrious list includes: E.A. Carson, Guggenheimer, Atwater, Jerome Kern, Edwin Hydeman, Wolfson, Champa and Miles. The last specimen to appear on the market was in the Auction '80 sale, where an AU55 brought $85,000.

This far superior specimen is an excellent value at.....$110,000

1788, Connecticut Miller 12.2-C.-122.3 grains. R3. Easily the FINEST KNOWN piece of its type. This coin was so well centered and sharply struck it almost completely negates the Nova Constellatio undertype that this piece was struck over. All major and minor details are fully struck up, including the two center dots. All reverse details—hair and robe folds—are sharp. Coloring is light brown with considerable mint red adhering on both obverse and reverse. A true example of the superb quality in early American coinage. EX: Garrett, Lot 1377; James W.
